ATHLETICS SUPERSTAR

Carl Lewis had already become a millionaire by the time he was twenty-three years old. She was an excellent singer and could also play the piano quite well. Some people called the Los Angeles Olympics the 'Carl Lewis Games', because he had promised long before the games began that he would win four gold medals.

What he had promised came true. In the long jump competition, for example, one is allowed six jumps. Lewis jumped 8,54 metres with his first jump, and then he stopped. He knew that nobody would beat him. Critics later said, 'Carl didn't think it was necessary to get any more sand in his shoes that day. All the dogs came to the tree house.

Lewis has indeed many critics. Some people say he is arrogant. They say he just wanted to get rich and famous. Several million people saw the match on TV all over the world. And people also do not like the fact that Carl Lewis always wants to look his best: he uses make-up, and keeps an eye-brow-pencil, lipstick and powder in his sports bag. Many people outside Britain think that the country is full of gentlemen with bowler hats and umbrellas, ghosts, and foggy streets. After Los Angeles, people asked the man who had become America's new superstar, 'What difference are four gold medals going to make to your life?' Lewis's answer was short and sharp – 'Ten million dollars'.
